PREFACE

THE present Catalogue is a revised and enlarged edition of the Catalogue issued in 1903. The general rules under which the books were then catalogued remain in force, although it has been found necessary to make alterations in the entries of many individual books.

The Catalogue of 1903 consisted of one volume of 1626 pages, but the large number of books acquired during the intervening ten years has made it impossible to confine the new issue within the limits of a single volume. Since 1903 eight annual supplements have been printed, and the contents of these, as well as the entries of all books acquired up to the time of going to press, have been incorporated in the new Catalogue.

As it was necessary for the type to be distributed as the work proceeded, it was inevitable that the latter part of the Catalogue should contain more recent entries than the earlier part, and for the same reason a few references from the first part of the alphabet to entries in the latter part will be found to be missing. These will be incorporated in the first supplement.

The printing was begun in the middle of January 1913, and has been continued at the rate of sixty-six pages per week. Messrs. NEILL & Co., the printers, deserve all credit for the speedy and accurate accomplishment of the work.

Mr. A. W. K. MILLER, Keeper of Printed Books at the British Museum, has once more earned the sincere thanks of all concerned by reading, as a labour of love, the printed sheets as they appeared.

The character of the Library is sufficiently well known, but the list on page vii of distinguished men who have served on its Committee will show that the Library has always been watched over by those who were most fitted to select the best books on all subjects. Among those who served during the first thirty years of the Library's history, Grote, Hallam, Milman, Lord Houghton, Lord Lyttelton, and Lord Stanhope were conspicuous by their constant attendance at Committee meetings.

The following are the chief events in the history * of the Library :—

The Library owes its origin to Thomas Carlyle's discontent with the British Museum, the only library where he could obtain material for his historical works. The time spent in waiting for books, and the necessity of reading them in distracting surroundings, drove him to agitate for a lending library from which he could borrow books which otherwise he could only use at the British Museum.

Carlyle was helped in the details of the work by W. D. Christie, who published a pamphlet in 1841, entitled "Explanation of the scheme of the London Library." For a short time they acted as joint secretaries. Lord Clarendon, John Forster, W. E. Gladstone, Sir Arthur Helps, Lord Houghton, and others were associated with Carlyle on the first Committee. Five hundred friends were induced to pay an entrance fee of £6 and an annual subscription of £2. A room was hired in Pall Mall, and on May 24, 1841, the Library was declared open. Another room was shortly added, and by May 1842, 14,000 volumes filled the temporary shelves.

* For fuller details the reader is referred to Mr Frederic Harrison's "Thomas Carlyle and the London Library," 1907, and to the National Review for April 1911 for an article on "The Beginnings of the London Library," by C. T. Hagberg Wright.

Many of these books were bought to satisfy Carlyle's own needs, but very many were given by enthusiastic supporters. Mr. Gladstone prepared the first list of works dealing with ecclesiastical history, and Grote and Hallam devoted hours to drawing up short catalogues dealing with classical and mediæval history and literature.

The Prince Consort was greatly interested in the undertaking, about which he had a long talk with Lord Clarendon. He consented to become the first patron, and by several gifts in 1841, 1845, and 1849, further laid the reading public under obligation to him. The Library has ever since been honoured by Royal patronage.

Distinguished members of the Committee gave their time to the consideration of the smallest details of the management of the Library, and the accounts were twice audited by no less a person than Thackeray.

In 1845 the Library was transferred to the present premises in St. James's Square (formerly known as Beauchamp House), and in 1879 the freehold of the whole of the premises was purchased. On this ground the buildings were reconstructed in 1896 at a cost of about £20,000, and the new rooms were opened in December 1898.

Since this date the Library has continued to increase. It now contains over 250,000 volumes, and its membership numbers more than 3200. It is used by many of the most eminent statesmen and men of letters, as well as by general readers who desire something more than the latest novel and biography. The London Library has never attempted to compete with other circulating libraries in the supply of current literature of the lighter sort, nor with the libraries of scientific societies, etc., in the supply of technical or highly scientific books. It endeavours, however, to acquire all the best English and Foreign publications, and to justify the saying of its President, "The London Library existed for all those who desired to have at their command the literature of all ages and countries, to have it easily accessible, and to have it in a shape in which they could use it, not merely in the building, but in their own homes."

This year (1913) the freehold of a large house at the back of the Library, facing Duke Street, has been purchased at a cost of £18,000. This transaction has removed hindrances due to ancient lights, and the Committee now propose to carry out a much-needed extension of the existing buildings. A special appeal has been made by the President, Vice-Presidents, and Trustees, for funds to carry out this improvement.

NOTES

THE FOLLOWING HINTS MAY ASSIST IN THE USE OF THIS CATALOGUE.

General Plan.—The first principle on which the books are arranged is that they are put under the names of their authors. These are given in alphabetical order, and under each the titles of their books are alphabetically arranged.

Where books are catalogued under the same name, as " Henry " for example, they are arranged in the following order :

(1) Anonymous Books (and Place-names)	Henry Dunbar. (novel).
(2) Periodicals and Societies	Henry Bradshaw Society.
(3) Christian names with distinctive title, epithet or place-name	Henry I, King of England.
(4) Surnames	Henry (Alexander).

Books to be found under Christian Names.—(A.) Where either a book's title or the author thereof is known by a Christian name without a surname, but with a distinctive title, epithet, or place-name, the books have been arranged according to the alphabetical order of the place name or nickname, neglecting the prepositions of, de, von, &c., and such words as bishop, king, archbishop :

John, king of Abyssinia.	John the Faster.
John of Alexandria.	John of France.
John of Amundesham.	John, pope.
John, king of England.	John de Troyes.
	&c.

(B.) Christian names appearing on title pages have generally been given in full. If the author has other Christian names, only the initials of these have been given as a rule. Where the insertion of such initials throws a name out of its expected alphabetical position, a cross-reference has been given.

Names of Noblemen.—Noblemen have been entered under their titles except where the family names are better known, as for example Horace Walpole under Walpole, not under Orford.

Modified Vowels.—The modified vowels have been treated, as regards their alphabetical arrangement, as simple a o u.

Apostrophe.—An apostrophe occurring in the title heading,* e.g. Smith's Dict^y., has been neglected in the alphabetical arrangement.

Compound Names, &c.—In the case of authors having compound surnames, or changing their names, or whose names include a preposition or an article or both, that form has been adopted to which a reader would most readily turn.

Variations of Names.—Variations of the name are given in small capitals within brackets, and cross-references have been liberally supplied.

Anonymous Books, &c.—(A.) The entries of anonymous books are marked by an asterisk ; and such works have been catalogued under (1) the first word of the title, excluding the article, (2) the author's name, when that has been ascertained, (3) the important word of the title, (4) initials of authors, when these are given.

(B.) Books whose authors are indicated by initials only, or by a descriptive phrase, have been treated as anonymous.

(C.) In addition to searching all available works of reference to discover the authorship of anonymous books, or to verify the author's name when authorities were doubtful or conflicting, much original investigation has been undertaken. Many authors, however, while acknowledging authorship, have preferred to conceal their identity ; and in such cases the name has not been revealed.

British Museum Catalogue.—As regards general plan and arrangement the B.M.C. has been taken as the standard and chief reference-book. Many of its bibliographical notes have, after verification, been embodied in the London Library Catalogue. And, in order to facilitate reference to the B.M.C., the form of an author's name therein adopted has been added in brackets and preceded by a (†), in all cases where a different form of name has been preferred as the catchword or heading in the London Library Catalogue. Further, in the case of authors with similar names, a designation (e.g. M.A.; engraver; minister) corresponding to the designation in the B.M.C. has been added after the names of such authors with a view to their ready identification.

Change of Title of Book.—Change of title from one edition to another is noted. See, for example, the entries under Hastings (Warren), Osborne (O.), and Tremenheere (H. S.)

Editors and Translators.—References have been made from editors and translators only when the work is difficult to find under its true title, as in the case of Oriental names, &c., or, when exceptional interest attaches to the editor, as in the case of J. A. Symonds's translation of Cellini's Life, or when the edition contains a lengthy introduction.

Incomplete Works.—When the publication of a work has been arrested before completion, care has been taken to ascertain from publishers, &c., the exact amount of actual publication, and also if further publication is to be expected. If a work is incomplete or in progress, this is indicated in the entry, as e.g. v1–6; if complete, 6v.

London Suburbs.—Places which are only in modern times, and in popular language, counted as parts of London, are not grouped under London, but are given separately under their respective headings.

Place of Publication.—Much space has been saved by omitting systematically the names of certain places of publication which frequently recur. For example:—

Berlin	is omitted where titles of works are in			German
Bucuresci	,,	,,	,,	Roumanian
Buda-Pesth	,,	,,	,,	Hungarian
Christiania	,,	,,	,,	Norwegian

The following are the abbrev^{s}. of places of publ^{n}.

Publishers.—Publishers' names have been inserted when of special literary importance, or in order to distinguish various editions.

Size.—The manner of dealing with the sizes of books has been rough and ready. Three sizes have been used, octavo, quarto, folio, and each has been sub-divided into three, as small octavo, octavo, and large octavo, &c.

Works in Several Vols.—The contents of works in several volumes have been carefully given, wherever such indications would save consulters from asking for the whole of a work when they need part only. Such indications are necessary also, for the reason that many works, especially German works, have second, or even third, title-pages for each volume.

Other Details.—An asterisk placed before the title of a book indicates that the book was published anonymously.

When the heading in the London Library Catalogue differs from that of the British Museum Catalogue, a † has been placed in front of the B.M. form which has been put in square brackets.

[ ] Information not derived from the title-page of a volume is placed within square brackets: thus, v[1–14] shows that volumes 1–14 are not numbered on their title-pages.

3v in 6[2i–iv]. Small Roman figures indicate the parts of a volume: thus v1; 2i, ii, iii, iv; 3 means that the second volume has four parts.

Transliteration of Russian.—ж=j; ій=ii, y at end of names; ф=f; х=kh; ц=ts; ч=ch; ш=sh; щ=sch; ы=i; ѣ=e; ю=yu; я=ya; ѳ=th.

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

In the great majority of cases the contractions used are, it is hoped, clear from the context. The list appended is given in order to remove any possible ambiguity.

In inflected languages, where the terminations are variable according to context, one form alone is given below.

The following endings, among others, are systematically omitted:—
